The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims 1-53 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as containing subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to reasonably convey to one skilled in the relevant art that the inventor(s), at the time the application was filed, had possession of the claimed invention. The disclosure describes (e.g. pg. 25, fig. 3A) a device wherein an elastomeric polymer expands against a crank pin (#504) to move the pin. However, since a polymer has little or no rigidity, it appears that electrical actuation of the polymer would result merely in a bending distortion of the polymer sheet with no relative movement (expansion) between its ends, and no movement of the crank pin. The inertia in the mechanical crank system would not be overcome by any lengthening of the polymer due to electrical excitation. It would be like trying to push something with a limp string thus from the original disclosure the device appears to be inoperative. Other problems with the disclosure are that, contrary to some claims (e.g. 4 & 33) the electroactive element is parallel to the axis (# 503), but written and illustrated embodiments show only a perpendicular relationship. It is also undisclosed how an external loud provides increases an elastic strain in the electroactive polymer, or how deflection of the polymer can be independent of elastic potential energy of the polymer. Perhaps applicant could point out where the written description addresses these problems.

The following prior art is cited of interest. No prior art is applied at this time due to the question of operability of applicants claimed device. Crank or rotary piezo-electric or polymeric transducers are shown by Wood. Mellon, Riff, Simes and Carroll.
